If the sanded area ends up below the surface of the rest of the paint, you can build the area back up again by using body putty or filler. Then wet sand the putty or filler to smooth the surface. If you problem is merely a simple dent with no paint damage, you can use a common bathroom plunger to pop the dent up.

Sanding is important when repairing car body dents, dings and scratches, as well as buffing out a new paint job. However, use a sanding block or a sanding tool rather than your hands for auto body work. Sanding with just your hands often results in “natural” grooves and errors, sometimes even when you’re very careful.
